a. Briefing of Holabirds at Langley: On 25 January [REDACTED] attended the briefing and orientation visit of the first group of Fort Holabird trainees at Langley. The group numbered 34 officers and included mostly Captains, a sprinkling of Lieutenants and a few Majors.

[REDACTED] was present as stand-in for [REDACTED] of the Office of Security handled the reception and presented the speakers. The morning was devoted to a briefing on the efforts of Soviet Intelligence to penetrate the security of American services and described its provocation techniques of sex entrapment behind the Iron Curtain. The lecture also dealt with the attempts of the Soviets to recruit Western penetration agents in areas outside the Soviet sphere of influence.

Following lunch at the Fort Meyer Club the officers returned to hear a lecture on counter audio-surveillance. A technician from OS delivered a comprehensive talk on the various devices used by the Soviet IS to penetrate our defenses and the technical equipment used by CIA to counter their efforts. His talk was supported by color slides of sub-miniature microphones and he exhibited several pieces of counter audio equipment.

The day's activities were well received by the group and Major Douglas Logan stated that he believed the presentation had been set at just the right tone and level for the group, which for the most part was made up of newcomers to the intelligence field.

25X1A b. Doug Logan, having called the previous day to make an appointment for himself and Colonel Sheldon, arrived alone on 30 January. He explained that at the last minute the Colonel had been called to a hush-hush conference. Doug reports that the rumor virus has spread to Holabird, but the only substance he was able - or willing - to give was from our standpoint rather puny: the possibility that reserve lieutenants held on active duty beyond their appointed time might soon be released. It did, however, give me an opening to mention the problem of career service in Army Intelligence in relation to Agency training, and specifically, Colonel [REDACTED] impending transfer. 25X1A He assured me that although he didn't know what the Colonel's new assignment was, it would still be in the intelligence field, so that his [REDACTED] training would not be lost. He added that the Army was well on the way to a career intelligence service.

The specific purpose of his visit was threefold: First, he said he had recently come into some money and he wanted to explore the possibility of permission to copy the films that Holabird borrows most frequently -- Personal Meetings, Drops and Safesites, and Agent Acquisition. He realized that I could not authorize this, and I promised to see what could be done. Later, I presented this request to [REDACTED], who came up with what looks like the best solution and one which leaves us in relatively the same position from the standpoint of Security and CI clearance -- that we have the films copied at [REDACTED] and let Holabird have them on indefinite loan subject to 24-hour recall. Thus we would retain control while relieving Holabird of the necessity for regular pick-up and return courier runs. Doug probably could not let us have his money under this arrangement, but it should satisfy his needs. 25X1A 25X1A

Doug's second errand was to give us the schedule of his film needs for the next month, which we relayed to [REDACTED] and which he tells us presents no conflicts: Drops and Safesites on 17 February, and Personal Meetings on 27 February and 1 March. 25X1A

His last errand was rather more complicated. He has to write a paper for a briefing that Colonel [REDACTED] is to give 25X1A

next week to the J-2 and J-3, and one question concerns the positive intelligence assets that would be available in case an upheaval in any one of the world's hot spots should require the dispatch of an Army cold-war task force. Since the Army does not have such assets of its own in many places, his query related to the availability of Agency assets. He said he understood this matter had been discussed at the Norfolk Conference last summer. I was not able to reach the appropriate DD/P officers while Doug was here, so I promised to get an answer for him by Thursday, when he brings the second Holabird group to Langley. Later [REDACTED] gave me the expected answer: That the Agency would give all possible support, but that control of its assets would be turned over to the Army only upon specific DCI approval. I believe this will satisfy Doug; if not, I will arrange for him to talk directly with Hugh or with [REDACTED]
